

About this Guide. FosterClub, the national network for young people in foster care, recognizes the struggle faced by youth in foster care during the holidays. This guide offers ideas and encouragement to adults who parent, mentor and support foster youth. Please pass it on.

“If you can’t be there on Christmas just call to let me know you care.”

— FosterClub member Sherena, age 22, from Georgia, in foster care more than 8 years for supportive adults to help a young person in foster care through the holidays

“My first year in foster care was the first year I ever got a stocking of my own and got to pick it out! It made me feel like one of the lucky kids in the movies.”

— FosterClub member Joscelynn, age 22, from California, in foster care more than 10 years

1. Prepare the foster youth in your care for the holidays in your home

Have a discussion with the young person about your family’s holiday customs. Do you celebrate over multiple days, or is there one “main” celebration? Are there religious customs? Will gifts be exchanged? What should they wear? Who will they meet? What preparations need to be done in advance? Will there be visitors to the home? Will they be taken on visits to the homes of other family or friends? And in all of these events, will your youth be expected to participate? Knowing what to expect will help to decrease anxiety around the holidays. Avoid surprises and you will decrease seasonal tensions.

2. Prepare friends and family before you visit

Let people know in advance about new family members in your home. Surprising a host or hostess at the door with a “new” foster youth may set up an awkward situation — such as a scramble to set an extra place at the table — making the young person feel like an imposition right from the start of the visit. Your preparation of friends should help cut down on awkward, but reasonable questions such as “who are you?” or “where did you come from?”

“The hardest thing was to sit around the Christmas tree in a room full of strangers and look at a package that says ‘To Sharde’ ‘From Foster Mom’.”

— FosterClub member Sharde, age 21, from Indiana, in foster care over 12 years

how you can help

Donate. The young people of FosterClub are resilient and determined to change life in foster care. But they could use a little help from a friend like you. Make a donation at www.fosterclub.org or call 503-717-1552 and make a donation today.

3. Remember confidentiality

You may receive well intended but prying questions from those you visit with over the holidays. If your young person is new to your home, it is natural that family members ask questions about your youth’s background. Understand that questions are generally not meant to be insensitive or rude, but simply come from a place of not knowing much about foster care. Think in advance about how to answer these questions while maintaining your youth’s confidentiality. Use the opportunity to educate interested family and friends. Discuss with your young person how they would like to be introduced and what is appropriate to share about their history with your family and friends. (Remember, they have no obligation to reveal their past.)

4. Arrange meeting your family in advance, if possible

The hustle and bustle of the holidays can make it particularly chaotic for your young person to participate in your family traditions. Anxiety may run high for young people already, and the stress of meeting your relatives may be a lot to deal with. If possible, you can arrange a casual “meeting” in advance of “main events.” If it is not possible or practical to meet beforehand, make a list of names of some of the people they’ll meet and their connection to you. You can also encourage a quick call from relatives you plan to visit to deliver a personal message of “we are excited to meet you” so that your youth knows they will be welcome.

5. Have extra presents ready to help offset differences

It should not be expected that all relatives purchase presents for your youth. Be prepared with other small gifts and for those family members that express concern over not having brought a gift, offer one of your “backups” for them to place under the tree. Extra presents may be addressed “from Santa”, even for older youth, to help offset a larger number of gifts other children may receive at the same time. Children often keep count of the number of gifts received (right or wrong) and use it to compare with other kids, so sometimes quantity is important.

6. Facilitate visits with loved ones

The holidays can be a busy time for everyone including foster parents and caseworkers. But it is especially important during this time of year to help your young person arrange for visits with loved ones. Don't allow busy schedules to mean the postponement of these important visits. Try to get permission for your youth to make phone calls to relatives (if long distance charges are an issue, ask if calls can be placed from the foster care agency or ask a local business or individual to “donate” by allowing the use of their phone). A youth may wish to extend holiday wishes to relatives and friends from an old neighborhood, but may need your help getting phone numbers together. Use the opportunity to help the youth develop their own address book.

“My first holiday season was very difficult. I was living mostly with one family and they planned to go see their son who was away at college. Feeling like the family dog that had to go to the kennel, I too was sent away to another family member’s house.”

— FosterClub member Jen, age 20,
from Michigan, in foster care more than 10 years

“I wish I could say holiday foster care experiences were warm and tingly, and that I get all gushy inside. But to be honest, it stunk. I ended up feeling sad at night. When I looked around me, I saw families that loved each other... but that love was apparent to whom it was directed, which wasn't me.”

— FosterClub member Schylar, age 24, from Montana, in foster care more than 11 years

7. Help them make sure their loved ones are okay

Young people may worry that their family members are struggling through the holidays. If homelessness has been a regular issue, the winter season may bring cold weather and extreme hardship. Your youth may experience guilt if they feel a loved one is struggling while they, the youth, are living in comfort. Knowing that a biological parent or sibling has shelter from the cold or has their other basic needs met may ease a young person's mind through the always emotional holidays.

“Ask youth what they want to do for the holidays. Try to make that happen if the situation is a safe one. Be supportive of what they want.”

— FosterClub member Aaron, age 24, from Nebraska, in foster care 6 years

8. Extend an invitation

If it is safe and allowed by your foster care agency, consider extending an invitation to siblings or bio-parents through the holidays. It need not be an invitation to your “main” holiday event, consider a “special” dinner for your youth to celebrate with their loved ones. If this not a possibility to do within your home, consider arranging a visit at a local restaurant (ask the caseworker if it would be appropriate for the visit to be unsupervised or if your supervision would suffice). Extending an invitation to their loved ones need not signal to a young person that you support their bio-family's lifestyle or choices — rather it tells a young person that you respect their wish to stay connected to family. You will also send a message to the youth that they aren't being put in a position to “choose” your family over their bio-family and that it is possible to have a relationship with all the people they care about.

“Now that I’ve aged out, holidays are definitely worse. If no one invites me to their house to spend the holidays I just sit at home.”

— FosterClub member Joshua, age 19, from Oregon, in foster care 11 years

9. Understand and encourage your youth’s own traditions and beliefs

Encourage discussion about the holiday traditions your young person experienced prior to being in foster care, or even celebrations they liked while living with other foster families. Incorporate the traditions the youth cherishes into your own family celebration, if possible. Use the opportunity to investigate the youth’s culture and research customary traditions. If the young person holds a religious belief different from yours, or if their family did, check into the traditions customarily surrounding those beliefs.

10. Assist in purchasing or making holiday gifts or in sending cards to their family and friends

Allow young people to purchase small gifts for their relatives, or help them craft homemade gifts. Help send holiday cards to those that they want to stay connected with. The list of people that your youth wishes to send cards and gifts to should be left completely to the youth, although precautions may be taken to ensure safety (for example, a return address may be left off the package, or use the address of the foster care agency) and compliance with any court orders.

“Each year we lose the smiles on our faces because the holidays remind my siblings and me how much we’re not like everyone else. All of us do poorly in school, we tend to get into trouble, and we all seem to argue and fight over meaningless things.”

Foster Club member JJ, age 20, from Michigan, in foster care for 4 years

“Although I was unaware of it at the time, I was denied visitations with my grandparents I lived with before going to my first foster home at age three. At the time I didn’t know that I was missing out on family that wanted to see me. I mostly felt as if I didn’t have a family who wanted me or cared enough to find me.”

— FosterClub member Crystal, age 20, from Wisconsin, in foster care more than 7 years

about us

FosterClub is the national network for young people in foster care. For nearly half a million children living in the foster care system across the country, childhood has been interrupted by abuse, neglect or abandonment. FosterClub is their club — a place to turn for advice, information, and hope. Our members are resilient young people determined to build a better future for themselves and for other kids coming up through the system behind them. Learn more about FosterClub or how you can support young people in foster care at www.fosterclub.org or by calling 503-717-1552.

11. Understand if they pull away

Despite your best efforts, a young person may simply withdraw during the holidays. Understand that this detachment most likely is not intended to be an insult or a reflection of how they feel about you, but rather is their own coping mechanism. Allow for “downtime” during the holidays that will allow the youth some time to themselves if they need it (although some youth would prefer to stay busy to keep their mind off other things — you will need to make a decision based on your knowledge of the young person). Be sure to fit in one-on-one time, personal time for your youth and you to talk through what they are feeling during this emotional and often confusing time of year.

12. Call youth who formerly lived with you

The holidays can be a particularly tough time for youth who have recently aged out of foster care. They may not have people to visit or a place to go for the holidays. In addition, young people commonly struggle financially when they first leave foster care. A single phone call may lift their spirits and signal that you continue to care for them and treasure their friendship. Be sure to include these youth on your own holiday card list. A small token gift or gift basket of homemade holiday goodies may be especially appreciated.

Thank you for your support of young people in foster care.
